At first glance, the dumpsite along Black Fox Road, Perry Township, didn't seem very large. The volunteers got off to a great start and quickly cleared the west end of scattered trash. Once they got to the main concentration of trash, things slowed considerably. It turned out there were decades of trash that was many layers deep. Every item of trash removed uncovered multiple additional items underneath.

After four hours and nearly filling the roll off, the volunteers were exhausted from the numerous treks up and down the steep slope with bag after bag of trash, not to mention all the larger items they pulled up the hill. Although we were not able to finish the site that day, these volunteers made a great start toward eliminating this dumpsite.
